The Jewish Law Association invites applications to present from all with interests related to the work of the academic community studying Jewish law. Presenters will include academics, advanced students and non-academics from across Europe and beyond. This established academic forum has historically included Jews and non-Jews with a diverse range of approaches, disciplines and interests. Panels at the conference will address, inter alia, the current state of the field in Europe, law and literature, as well as the development of Jewish law in contemporary Judaism's.

This year's conference is being held in Berlin to coincide with the opening of the Zacharias Frankel College for the training of Conservative Rabbis and with the founding of the School of Jewish Theology at Potsdam University.
